JUDICIAL ETHICS OPINION
JE-90

September 17, 1997

Question: May a judge employ his wife as secretary?

Answer: No. When a judge employs his wife as his secretary he violates the provisions of the Code which prohibit nepotism.

The question presented is whether a judge may employ his wife as his secretary and pay her from the State Treasury. The answer is no because in doing so the judge violates the provisions of the Code of Judicial Ethics which prohibit nepotism. Canon 3B(4). A judge may employ a relative so long as he or she does not use state funds to compensate that relative.
